3. (d)
Anne wanted people to love her as she was and not for her beauty, because beauty is temporary and cannot last her whole life.
4. (c)
The poem is all about a conversation between a young man and a young woman. The young woman is also the protagonist of the poem and that is Anne Gregory.

6. (c)
William Butler Yeats is the poet of the poem.
7. (d)

9. (d)
The statement marked as B is cent per cent correct as the poem is in the conversation form but the statement marked as A is wrong as it is not written by Ogden Nash but by William Butler Yeats.
10. (d)
Both the Statements marked as A and B are cent per cent correct as the poem is definitely written in the rhyming form and also Anne Gregory has beautiful long hair. Both the Statements are True.

14. True
15. Anne suggests that she can get her hair dyed and colour it brown, black or red so that young men would love her for herself and not for having golden hair.
16. By "great honey colored ramparts at your ear" the poet refers to the golden outer parts of the ears of young woman. He says that young men are thrown into despair by them because they are so beautiful and captivating.
17. The young lady has a point to prove. She wants to prove that she can change her external appearance or the colour of her hair easily. She can dye her hair brown, black or of carrot's colour. But she doesn't want to be loved for her beautiful long yellow hair. She should be loved for 'herself alone' or for what she actually is.
18. The old religious man told the poet that he had found a text to prove that only God could love her for herself alone. Only God could love her for her spiritual beauty and not for her physical beauty. However, her physical beauty carried significance for men.
- 19.
- The speaker is Anne Gregory.
 - Young men are in despair because her honey-coloured hair is so beautiful and distracting that they will love her for her hair and not for the person she is.
 - The antonym for 'despair' is 'cheerful'.
 - William Butler Yeats.
20. The other speaker mentioned the text found by an old religious man that proves that only God can love Anne for herself alone. The poet highlights this point because he wanted to tell Anne that her desire that men should not see her outer beauty is not going to be fulfilled. The speaker tells Anne that only God can be so great as to avoid external beauty and look beyond it. He loves us for our inner qualities. Man, on the other hand, falls for all things that appear pretty from outside and never bothers about what lies inside.
21. (c)
- The poem uses literary devices like metaphor and alliteration, but the rhyming scheme is abcbdb, not aabbcc.
